I decided to become a CPA first of all because my father is a CPA. He encouraged me to try out the major in school. Once I got involved in it though, I really enjoyed the idea of knowing the financial backbone of companies. I think this is a great start, it's a great way to know business in general and it really just intrigued me.

The favorite part of the work that I do is working closely with my clients. To advise them and teach them about their financial statements. By them better understanding their financials, they're able to make better business decisions. And I come from a family of teachers, I love to teach, it's very rewarding to me.

What I bring to my profession is nine years of accounting experience in public accounting. I have an expertise in a number of various accounting softwares and I work closely with family-held businesses.
