

Ryan High Video Bio

My clients expect me to provide them timely feedback to, you know, grow their practice and whether that's through tax, financial advice, or other means, just to be able to provide them good timely feedback.

Coming into the office not knowing what I'm going to work on that day, it's kind of exciting. Because one day I may be working with, you know, a dentist on a tax project and the next day I may be working with a physician on a compensation issue. So just not knowing what I'm going to be working on that day really brings challenges and excitement to me every day.

I think the thing that I'm most proud of, and my greatest accomplishment, is to be able to balance out my work life as well as my workload here at the office. During tax season, we work six days a week and, you know, being able to see my family and just have that good balance between the two of them is probably my greatest accomplishment.

While working with a physician, I was able to refer that individual to our wealth management division. And with working with our wealth management division, they were able to set aside an additional thirty thousand dollars into their retirement plan. In addition to that, they were able to start funding their kids education into college.