My clients need the most help in preparing their tax returns, filing their tax returns and achieving the goals within their practice. And the results they achieve with that are minimizing their tax liabilities every year, improving their cash flow and achieving their practice's goals.

I like to spend a lot of time initially really getting to know my clients and their goals for their practice. And then working with my clients on a regular basis to help them develop a plan to achieve their goals and monitor to make sure they're really achieving what they want.

I became an accountant because I wanted a job a lot like my dad's. My dad was a vet and he used his skills as a vet to help farmers out with all the problems they might have on their farms. So I think I get to do that same thing with all the financial knowledge I have and help people with their financial lives.

My favorite part of being an accountant is being able to work with doctors and dentists who want to be able to focus on their practice and not focus on the financial aspect and being able to take over that whole financial aspect for them.
