

Jack Clapham Video Bio

I've known I wanted to be a CPA for a long time. I grew up with a love of numbers and math, and it was always my favorite subject in school. When I got to high school and took my first accounting class, and I learned I could kind of blend that love of numbers with the business world, I was sold I knew that was it for me.

My favorite part about this job is the type of businesses we work with and the size of the businesses that we work with. I love working with these small businesses where we get to work directly with the business owners and get to know them on a personal level and really help them grow their business and meet the goals that they have. I'm excited to show up every day because every day is different, and I love the unknown of it. Clients reach out all the time with different problems they have and I love to help them try and figure those out.

My favorite way to work with our clients is still face to face, in person. I know that remote calls and meetings are very common nowadays but I feel like we have the most productive conversations when we meet in person.
